An Averaged Day

For Elizabeth I

(only like 50% true).

By O. Potley

One sunny(ish) morning Queen Elizabeth I was sitting on her throne with her close adviser walter cor as she liked to call him, water) standing next to her. "Your majesty?"
"Yes water?" said Elizabeth.

"You look a bit, ill." said walter "do you want me to take you to the hospital?"
"I is it looks seireous." she replied.

"I looks like the plague."
"Of course then!" she said a little shocked.

A while later they arived at the hospital being Queen she showed and barged her way to the front.
The Doctor started checking her biles. "Black bile balenceenced, red bile baleeenced, Yelolow bile unbalenced, phlegm unbanced.
Wedll your majesty it looks like you have small pox" he said "but you can cure it by spreading butter on 3 chickens rear and straping them to your sore head and arm pits!"
"very well, water get 3 chickens some butter, a knife and do what the doctor said but to me!"

So walter did as hes told.
Later that day The Queen walking down the street, when all of a child shouted at her "Hey, ugly, old, chicken lady where do you live the barn?!"
Her face went bright red and she screamed "OF WITH YOUR HEAD!!!"
Some young lady started talking about her.
"You your talking so much scolds bridle now! And you your a witch arent you gave me small pox you shall be dunked then burned!"

The End.